Mia Uys is a first year PhD candidate at the University of Cape Town working on a more-than-human history of South Africa's National Zoological Garden. This project aims to investigate the changing ways animals experienced captivity at the institution, and the broader global trade network they formed part of. She was awarded the Oppenheimer Memorial Trust Local Scholarship to pursue this project. She has published research on animal performances in South African's circus industry which formed part of her MA dissertation at Stellenbosch University.
