This book analyses the role industrial policy can play in the transformation of African economies. Using examples from Zambia's industrial development experience, this book illustrates that core features of the colonial economy have not just survived six decades of independence in most African countries, but they have continued to shape the nature, scope and pace of economic activities on the continent. This book will be of interest to researchers across Economics, Development, Postcolonial Studies and African Studies.

Fredrick Mutesa (Discussant)

Dr. Fredrick Mutesa has over twenty years lecturing experience at both undergraduate and graduate levels in the multi-disciplinary field of Development Studies, mostly at the University of Zambia. He has also served in several universities around the world in various capacities. Dr Mutesa has consulted to Governments, Non-State Actors, and Donors, in the broad field of socio-political and economic development. His expertise includes designing, monitoring and evaluating development interventions.
