

LECTURER

Historical Studies

Faculty of Humanities

Applications are invited for a full-time permanent appointment at the Lecturer level in the Department of Historical Studies, University of Cape Town. The Department is a leading centre for critical historical scholarship in Africa. Information about the Department can be found at <http://www.historicalstudies.uct.ac.za/>.

Requirements:

- A PhD in History or a cognate discipline. Exceptional candidates nearing the completion of PhD may also be considered for the position.
- Undergraduate teaching experience.

Recommendations:

- Peer-reviewed research publications will be an advantage.
- Experience in digitally enabled public-oriented history will be very positively considered.

Expectations:

We particularly encourage applications from scholars pursuing innovative research in any field of intellectual, cultural, economic, political and social history of pre-nineteenth-century southern Africa. Candidates are expected to have strong empirical grounding in their fields of specialization, a collaborative spirit, theoretical fluency, and ability and willingness to develop and teach critical, imaginative, and broad courses on precolonial and colonial southern Africa, as well as beyond their immediate research area.

Responsibilities:

- Teach at undergraduate and postgraduate levels.
- Supervise postgraduate student research.
- Undertake and publish own research.
- Carry out administrative responsibilities at department and/or faculty level as required.

The annual cost of employment, including benefits at Lecturer Level R850 385
