Thembi Lockett completed her PhD in Sociology at the University of the Witwatersrand. Her thesis, 'Hope and Utopianism in Everyday Life in an Aspiring City of Coal', explores the historical production of the space of the Waterberg (Limpopo) and manifestations of hope and relations to time and space in everyday life in the context of coal extraction and coal energy production in Lephalale - an 'aspiring city of coal'. Her postdoctoral research aims to deepen her work in the Waterberg region by exploring in greater depth the gender-nature-capital nexus in the historical development of coal production. Her research interests include critical and social theory, gender and feminist theory, political ecology, sociology of work, and radical pedagogies.
