

Department of Historical Studies, University of Cape Town
History Access Honours and Master's Scholarships

The Department of Historical Studies at the University of Cape Town has entered a new phase of curriculum innovation and knowledge production, expressed in an innovative five-year programme, HISTORY ACCESS, funded by the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation. Aimed at training a new generation of South African historians who are conceptually multilingual, technically competent, and academically rigorous, the projected key outcomes of this programme include the production of a critical multilingual conceptual lexicon, journal articles/ book chapters, innovative (new media) articulations of original research, and increased interface with public lives of the historical discipline.

HISTORY ACCESS is pleased to offer at the Department of Historical Studies, University of Cape Town:

- 3 one-year Master's scholarships, each to the value of the annual amount of ZAR 105,000, and
- 6 one-year Honours scholarships, each to the value of ZAR 95,000.

To students at appropriate levels who have proficiency and/ or interest either (i) in working with African vernacular language sources, or (ii) in innovative (new media) articulations of original research.

The questions of equity, redress, diversity and inclusion are absolutely central to both intellectual and operational aspects of the HISTORY ACCESS programme. We particularly encourage applications from woman and black (and especially African) South African students.
